

Homo Oeconomicus
Journal of Behavioral and Institutional Economics

Special Issue “Market(s) and Democracy” – Call for Papers

The journal Homo Oeconomicus will publish a special issue on the topic “Market(s) and Democracy,” following the 7th International Conference on Economic Philosophy held in Reims from May 28 to 31, 2024. The journal welcomes all contributions that address the topic and belong to behavioral and institutional economics, as well as political economy and political philosophy. The editors are particularly interested in articles tackling the following aspects:

- The analogy between markets and democracy as institutional mechanisms of social choice-making;
- Behavioral insights about the functioning of markets and democracy;
- How markets and democratic political regimes interact.

The submissions that fall into the scope of the special issue will be evaluated according to the usual procedure of the journal. The call for papers is open to all interested contributors, whether they presented their papers at the Reims conference. The special issue is expected to be published by the end of 2025.

Editors

- Florence Gallois (University of Reims Champagne-Ardenne), guest editor.
- Cyril Hédoïn (University of Reims Champagne-Ardenne), guest editor.
- Jean-François Laslier (Paris School of Economics), editor-in-chief.

Calendar and Guidelines

- The deadline for article submission is set for September 16, 2024. Only full articles can be submitted.
- Articles must be written in English and conform to the journal’s submission guidelines.
- All submissions must take place through the platform of the journal. When submitting, please make sure to indicate that the article belongs to the special issue “Market(s) and Democracy.”

For any requests for clarification, you can contact the editors of the special issue.